

I See the Solution Differently Now

I got an interesting email this week.

A law professor I have known for years asked if I could send him information "on the risks with Drs not washing hands etc." He is writing an article.

Instead of slides or statistics - I shared one of the most important but often overlooked truths about healthcare-associated infections

My response

"The big message with MRSA - is that doctors washing hands - doesn't come close to the solution - its about everyone washing hands and finding ways to comply with prevention measures - both those that are known and those that can only be recognized in the course of work by an activated community, which includes everyone that comes in contact with the care environment."

This is not the answer I would have thought to give two years ago.
